park staff, outfitters and the Willmore Wilderness Foundation are working to clear a number of overgrown trails. None of the river mountain flanked valleys, into side basins and along wildflower-strewn ridges – often without seeing other humans. Wilderness Park is for you. More than 750 km of trails bisect this 4,597 km² park, bounded on the south by Jasper National Park and on the north with the Rocky Mountains. Mountain Trail soon heads north off Seep Creek Trail into alpine country with plentiful wildlife and extensive views. Further along, Mountain Trail bends southwest and climbs to a high point overlooking the Athabasca River Valley.

Putzy Creek is a good place to stop and look for wildlife and wildflowers. Here there's the infamous annual recreational paradise for trail and waterways users and a great place for viewing wildlife and wildflowers. And for hardcore runners, there's the infamous annual

William A. Switzer Provincial Park

The Willmore Plateau is a landform that stands as a barrier between the Central and Northern Rockies. The Willmore Plateau is the highest point of theAthabasca River drainage basin, with 3,000 km² of land and a peak of 3,340 m. The Willmore Plateau is the highest point of theAthabasca River drainage basin, with 3,000 km² of land and a peak of 3,340 m. The Willmore Plateau is a landform that stands as a barrier between the Central and Northern Rockies. The Willmore Plateau is the highest point of theAthabasca River drainage basin, with 3,000 km² of land and a peak of 3,340 m.